American History

In this course students work toward an understanding of important trends, conflicts, and debates of our nation's history, through a study of transformational periods of that history. Our topics may range from early formulations of American identity in the colonial period, to the redefinition of democracy brought on by Reconstruction, to the radical movements and political re-alignment of the 1960s. Students read, discuss and respond to both historical and secondary sources to deepen their understanding of each topic.
